

I've observed the deterioration of content and diversity on television and particularly the radio for several years now, and have come to the conclusion that consolidation is a tremendous hinderance, not only culturally, but also to the uniquely American responsibility of being an informed citizen.

If further consolidation is allowed, the people of this country will be at the mercy of the relatively few for their economic and political and local news, not to mention purely entertainment-based broadcasts.

Thank you,
Lisa Croke